“It is never too late to be what you might have been.”

— George Eliot
